

White Card Used in Football for First Time

The first ever white card has been used by a referee in a professional football match.

Red and yellow cards have been used by referees for over 100 years as a punishment for bad behaviour on a football pitch. Yellow cards are typically shown to players who have committed a foul. Red cards are given to players who were too yellow cards or committed a more serious foul. If a player is shown a red card they are sent from the game.

Referee shows white card to a player.

What were yellow and red cards first used?

- The first time yellow and red cards were used was in the 1970 World Cup in Mexico.
- They were the invention of English referee Ken Aston. When refereeing abroad, he'd struggled to be understood when explaining players. During the 1966 World Cup, he also saw that sometimes the players didn't even know if they had been cautioned by a referee. Aston came up with the idea of referees using yellow and red cards to overcome language barriers and so that all the players and spectators could see what was going on.

So, you might think that a white card must be for something even worse... However, it's quite the opposite!

In an attempt to improve the game in the sport, the Portuguese Football Federation is now allowing referees to show a white card when they see an example of good behaviour, extraordinary and fair play.

Referee Carlos Cordeiro made history when he became the first referee to use the new white card.

In a women's cup match between Sporting Lisbon and Benfica, someone watching the game became amused and pleased.

Medical teams from both sides rushed to the player's aid. When the situation had been controlled, Cordeiro held up a white card to recognise the efforts of the medical teams.

The crowd got to their feet to cheer and applaud the decision.

Portugal is the only country to have introduced white cards into the game of football.

But, what do you think?

Is rewarding good behaviour in a football pitch a good idea and do you think more countries should copy the idea?

Glossary

- amused - Felt it was funny.
- pleased - Felt happy that good behaviour was rewarded.

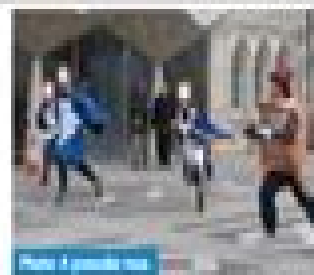

Pancake Day Traditions

Shrove Tuesday is an important day in the Christian religion and many countries have grown up around it.

Shrove Tuesday is the day before Ash Wednesday - when Lent begins.

As it was the last chance to use things up before Lent began, Shrove Tuesday became a traditional feast day.

Making pancakes was a way of using up flour, eggs, and fat as they became a popular food to eat on Shrove Tuesday. This is why it's now commonly called Pancake Day.

with wooden processions of straw bunnies on their heads flying streamers at the crowds.

The French name for Shrove Tuesday is Mardi Gras. It means Fat Tuesday and the Mardi Gras celebrations in New Orleans, US, have become world famous.

What is Lent?

- Lent is the season given to the 40 days leading up to Easter.
- Many Christians often choose to give up something during Lent as a way of reflecting and remembering the 40 days Jesus spent fasting in the wilderness.

It's not just eating pancakes though. Shrove Tuesday is a chance to celebrate and have fun. In many countries the days before Lent are called 'Carnival'.

The Venice Carnival in Italy is a two-week festival of people parading in the streets wearing extravagant costumes and masks.

The Rio Carnival in Brazil is the largest world according to Guinness World Records. It starts five days before Lent and is famous for its enormous parades. People in exotic costumes, huge floats and music dance through the streets while bells and drum parades take place all over the de Janeiro.

The town of Wharfedale in Belgium has one of there is a big party. People parade through the city on colourful floats throwing beads out to people in the street.

In England, there's not a tradition of big parties or parades on Shrove Tuesday. However, one British tradition does have a role.
