Membrane Structure and Mechanisms of Biological Energy Transduction J. Avery, 2012-12-06 The problem of electron transfer phosphorylation was first formulated in 1939 by Belitser and Tsibakova I who introduced the P/O criterion and showed that this ratio is more than 1 The authors noted that such a high value of the phosphorylation coefficient suggests a fundamental difference in the mechanisms of ATP formation coupled with respiration and glycolysis since in the latter case the amount of the ATP synthesized is equal to that of the substrate utilized A lot of hypothetical schemes were put forward to explain the nature of coupling between electron transfer and phosphorylation but none of them solved the problem Only quite recently one hypothetical scheme of energy coupling viz Mitchell's chemiosmotic concept 2/3 was supported by experimental data which allow us to prefer it to alternative possibilities In this paper I shall try to substantiate the statement that oxidation and phosphorylation can be coupled via a membrane potential as was postulated by Mitchell

Sterol Biosynthesis Inhibitors and Anti-Feeding Compounds T. Kato, 1986 Living organisms are separated from the outside world by their membranes which perform important roles for maintaining their lives Sterols are indispensable components in eukaryotic organisms for stabilizing membranes composed of phospholipid bilayers Most prokaryotic organisms on the other hand do not contain sterols in their membranes although recent studies indicated that the bacterium Methylobacterium capsulatus produces sterols 1 and many strains of Mycoplasma bacteria without cell walls require sterols as an essential growth factor 2 Some bacterial species synthesize hopanoids which are hypothesized to function like sterols in eu karyotic organisms 3 Significance of ergosterol in fungi has been recognized from the fact that the yeast Saccharomyces cerevisiae requires ergosterol for growth when cultured in a strictly anaerobic condition 1 Electron microscopic studies showed that membrane structures disappeared in the yeast grown anaerobically without a supplement of ergosterol 5 6 indicating the necessity of ergosterol for membrane biogenesis Further confirmation of the significant role of ergosterol in the membranes was derived from the studies on polyene antibiotics In the presence of polyenes such as nystatin filipin and amphotericin B fungal cells lose selective permeability of the membranes since polyenes interact with ergosterol such that the structure of the fungal membranes is disrupted 7 Biomedical Index to PHS-supported Research ,1991 National Agricultural Library Catalog National Agricultural Library (U.S.),1974 Perception of Behavioral Chemicals Dale Melvin Norris,1981 The Synthesis, Assembly, and Turnover of Cell Surface Components George Poste, Garth L.
