Comply with regulations regarding the use of abbreviations in the EHR system. If an organization is found to be noncompliant, they will be required to submit a plan of action for improvement. To mitigate instances, be proactive by running monthly reports to track The Joint Commission's prohibited abbreviations in clinical documentation.

EHRs and computer-assisted documentation are evolving. Many organizations use automatic corrector tools to convert banned abbreviations into the appropriate text. Due to software limitations, banned abbreviations can still appear in patient medical records. Do not solely rely on software to autocorrect abbreviations. Perform manual checks verifying that providers continue to exclude banned abbreviations from EHR documentation. Communicate with clinicians that show up on the report audits through training and education.
