

All About Volcanoes

What is a volcano?

A volcano is an opening in the crust where lava, volcanic gases, and ash are expelled onto the earth's surface. They typically have cone-like shapes with depressions at their centers.

Where are volcanoes found?

Volcanoes are found in many places on earth, especially along some tectonic plate boundaries. Volcanoes are also found at hot spots in the middle of plates, such as the Hawaiian Islands. Volcanoes are often found at divergent boundaries and at convergent boundaries where subduction takes place.

What are the types of volcanoes?

There are three main types of volcanoes: shield volcanoes, stratovolcanoes (also known as composite volcanoes), and cinder cones. Apart from these main types, other categories of volcanoes include calderas, lava domes, and fissures.

Do all volcanoes erupt?

Not all volcanoes are at risk of erupting. Active volcanoes have erupted in the last ~ 10,000 years and/or have the potential to erupt again. This includes all currently-erupting volcanoes. A dormant volcano could potentially erupt but has no current or recent eruptions. An extinct volcano is one scientists expect will never erupt again.
