Economics and Policies in Formulating Renewable Power Development Plans Bai-Chen Xie, Karim Anaya Stucchi, Hong-zhou Li, 2023-11-06

Renewable energy has been considered as an effective way to deal with challenges caused by energy security and climate change. In the past decades, the share of renewable energy in the energy mix has been increasing with a proportion of around 25% globally, benefitting from the steady maturity of economical, technological, and political issues. However, the gap between expectations of fast renewables-driven energy transitions and the reality of today's energy systems, which rely heavily on fossil fuels, remains stubbornly large. The development of renewable energy still faces uncertainties among them: cost changes driven by the potential technology breakthroughs, renewable power market-oriented progress, and various challenges related to grid interconnection of such intermittent renewable energy resources and some other factors. Many countries and regions have issued their plans in boosting the development of renewable power. However, not one renewable power exploitation plan is acceptable universally due to the varied developing level of economies and societies. It is of great significance to explore the economic, technological, and political influences of related factors in achieving the development target for renewable energy.
