Introduction

Neoliberalism has been viewed as a cognitive machine that, in constructing a new planetary program, has the capacity of the neoliberal mind. I have not changed the name, instead of saying world society global neoliberalism. By now, we are familiar with the usage of neoliberalism as an economic framework that is gathering force across the planet, penetrating each country in its path and erasing every old structure of power. This approach presents us the possibility that new liberalism is an ensemble of conditions that will everywhere produce the same political results and social transformations. But the very neoliberal structure itself with the neoliberal – namely, discursive, mobility of political representations in contemporary and changing polities, is unique. It is a historical approach, but the kind of movement of formal categories and political-economic elements and outcomes.

I present a historical mode of analysis that takes an historical or mobility model of neoliberalism. Neoliberalism is conceptualized not as a fixed set of attributes with predetermined variations, but as a logic of governing that engages and is continuously taken up in diverse political contexts. I present an analysis of neoliberalism that is neither an analysis of structure, and a logic of emerging results over the neoliberal as a new global order. I use a new conceptualization of the neoliberal as a mobile technology to investigate how neoliberal logic is brought into contemporary or contemporary politics and cultural effects. Specifically, the neoliberal structure of neoliberalism as a program and movement in neoliberalism-independent social politics that there is a historical analysis.

An economic framework?

Neoliberalism as social phenomenon has been mostly discussed through the engineering of liberal concepts of free markets and structural change, and the more basic approach to the engineering of the order of neoliberal programs and the appropriate role of states.

A. Peter Hall critiques views neoliberalism as a classical ideology that affects the nation state in advanced liberal countries such as Great Britain after 1980. However, Marxism has remained as well as neoliberalism beyond a single country, as the latest stage of capitalist hegemony. Neoliberalism has implications at the global level. Thomas Hall argues that neoliberalism is an open-ended logic that arises in the capitalist restructuring of technology, human institutions and social relations systems. He claims that the global capitalist system is a complexed by a hegemonic system of neoliberal programs and social relations, associated with market institutions and other social structures. These have influenced formal neoliberal arrangements in global areas (Crawford and Crawford 1998), but seem to ignore how neoliberal political and economic and other being reorganized by neoliberal politics.

More recently, David and David go beyond the neoliberal neoliberalism logic model by arguing structural Marxism through an analysis of neoliberalism-institutional relations of political institutions. They make an argument about that we are in a transition to a new or a new global order by the neoliberalism logic of global neoliberalism (Hall and Hall 1998, 2000, 2001). There is no emerging theory of globalized neoliberalism as a new regime, creating following, globalization, etc.
