The Great Depression was a severe economic downturn that began in 1929 and lasted until the mid-1930s. It was the longest and deepest economic recession in the history of the United States.

The Federal Reserve raised the interest rate to combat inflation, which led to a sharp decline in the stock market. This caused a loss of confidence in the financial system, and many banks failed.

Unemployment rose to nearly 25 percent, and many people lost their homes and businesses. The government took action to provide relief to the unemployed and to stimulate the economy.

The New Deal was a series of programs and policies that were implemented by the federal government to provide relief, recovery, and reform. It was led by President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The New Deal included programs such as the Social Security Act, the National Industrial Recovery Act, and the Agricultural Adjustment Act. These programs provided relief to the unemployed and to farmers, and they helped to stabilize the economy.

The New Deal also included programs that provided relief to the unemployed and to the elderly. These programs included the Federal Reserve Act, the National Industrial Recovery Act, and the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

The New Deal was a significant turning point in the history of the United States. It helped to bring the economy back to a state of relative stability and provided relief to the unemployed and to the elderly.
