If the operator wishes to fit a hydraulic lift to the table and does not possess a hydraulic cylinder lift, there are probably either single or double acting, 4 inch stroke A.S.A.E. standard Maewy Ferguson cylinders and hose kits. These are standard Maewy components and are available with necessary hoses and a specially designed "brake valve" coupling. The cylinders meet A.S.A.E. requirements and can be used for both type machines other than the ones should the need arise. The Maewy Ferguson standard coupling allows a break away of the hydraulic line, without damage, should the cylinder catch the table and begin to disengage the base. The coupling also allows disengagement should the external system be under load. Is the single acting cylinder in need, it is strongly advised that the positioning lift (sometimes referred to as a "mechanical stop lift") is used in order to ensure a proper return to the raising height after each hydraulic cylinder actuation. This lift will allow positive manual variation of the raising height in about one inch increments without the use of any special tools.

The types of draftstop found to be most successful are the "V" extension draftstop, the wingstop draftstop and the universal draftstop, as there will often provide noncompressibility in the fluid. It is recommended, however, that when the draftstop is equipped with a single speed related hydraulic control valve, that the "V" extension draftstop is used, see Fig. 5. In this case, if a wingstop or universal draftstop were used, difficulty would be encountered in preventing the lower links from moving such time the hydraulic lift was retracted. If it is not, potential air entrainment in the lower links by means of the stay links which are fitted with the "V" draftstop, this problem may be easily solved by fitting a double speed valve.
