This Technical Note discusses key findings of stress testing on the United States under the Financial Sector Assessment Program. Several stress tests were used to quantify the potential impacts of risks and vulnerabilities in banking and non-banking sectors. The stress tests run by the authorities and by companies under the Dodd-Frank Act (DFA) suggest that most large bank holding companies (BHCs) are resilient to shocks similar to the last crisis. For BHCs, the IMF staff's solvency stress tests over the initial stressed period are largely in line with the DFA stress testing results and suggest that the system is generally robust, although some BHCs would fall below the hurdle rate in the stressed environment.

British Parliamentary Parties Jack Brand, 1992. In this book, Jack Brand examines the role of the British Conservative and Labour parliamentary parties in the development of government policy since 1945. Focusing on six major policy fields: agriculture, education, housing, defence, the economy, and Scottish affairs, he argues that the influence of backbenchers has been consistently underestimated and that the close interdependence of front and backbenchers frequently produces surprising and significant effects on policy development. Dr Brand concludes that the common perception of backbenchers as powerless to affect the policies of their leaders is misleading and that they are essential to the development of government policy.
