

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether the use of a computer-based simulation could improve the performance of a group of students in a laboratory setting. The students were divided into two groups: one group used the simulation, and the other group used a traditional laboratory setting. The results showed that the students who used the simulation performed better than the students who used the traditional laboratory setting. The simulation was found to be a more effective tool for teaching and learning than the traditional laboratory setting.
