Let the Bird Fly Wade Johnston, 2019-10-01 It s easy for Christians in our day to become fearful and confused From doctrinal debates to culture wars some Christians feel like they move from one crisis to another Christ didn t die and rise for us to live afraid however and our crucified and risen Savior ascended to rule all things for our good We are not a people without hope We have Christ Let the Bird Fly reminds readers that we are a free people bought with the price of Christ s own blood We are free to weigh the issues of the day to engage our neighbor to live out our callings and know who we are no matter what redeemed children of God At the heart of the Christian life is a spoken word God s absolution the declaration that Christ s righteousness is our own through faith From this our Christian life flows and in this we find our confidence to live love and labor for our neighbor Law and gospel become lenses through which we see our world and others Together with the two kinds of righteousness civil and divine Christians have a sort of diagnostic tool for navigating life in a world given back to us as a penultimate gift We are graced to live beyond ourselves and the here and now We are gifted to consider and look forward to more than those live without the optimism and freedom of sins forgiven We are turned outside of ourselves and grounded even as we are made new and set loose to dare to live as though there is more to life than this life In short precisely when fear seems most tempting Christ calls us to let the bird fly
