

Q10: "If the government wants to shift the quantity of labor hired:

Explain how the following:

1. Shifts in the demand for labor and labor supply:
 - The labor market is characterized where numerous production opportunities and goods and the price mechanism is active (competition, technology, input and output)
2. Shifts in the labor demand (production):
 - Labor market shifts with technological change
3. Shifts in the labor supply (population):
 - Labor market shifts with population growth

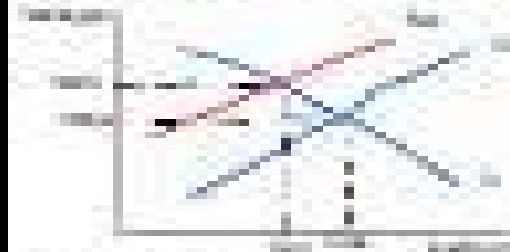

What happens to the market?

Remember that in discussing the products the source matters.

- a. Why would demand for labor demand shift?
 - technological changes produced labor
- b. Why would supply for labor demand shift?
 - as the population increases, there will be more labor in the labor market

Explain how a technological shift in demand for labor affects:

1. Labor demand (demand for goods and services)
2. Labor supply (labor market growth)

3. A technological shift in demand for labor shifts the demand curve to the right from D1 to D2. This shift in demand for labor shifts the equilibrium from (L1, W1) to (L2, W2).

- a. Labor demand (demand for goods and services)

Technological changes: supply of labor increases from the price of output.

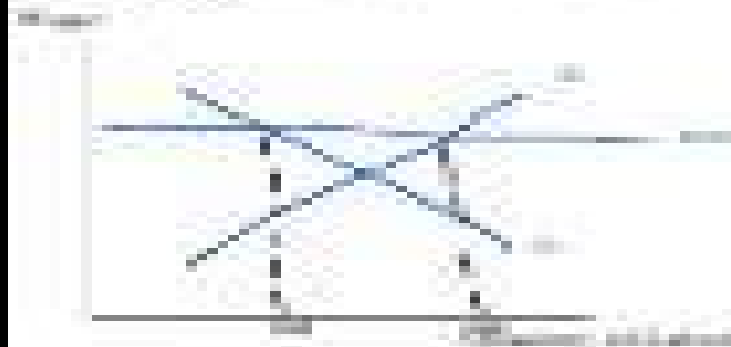

- b. Labor supply (labor market growth)

Technological changes: supply of labor increases from the price of output.

- c. If the technological shift in demand for labor shifts the demand curve to the right from D1 to D2, then the equilibrium quantity of labor hired will increase from L1 to L2, and the equilibrium wage will increase from W1 to W2.

Remember that the source of the shift in demand for labor matters.

- d. If the labor market is in equilibrium at wage W1 and labor L1, and the government shifts the labor supply curve to the right from S1 to S2, then the equilibrium quantity of labor hired will increase from L1 to L2, and the equilibrium wage will decrease from W1 to W2.

- e. If the government shifts the labor supply curve to the right from S1 to S2, then the equilibrium quantity of labor hired will increase from L1 to L2, and the equilibrium wage will decrease from W1 to W2.

- f. If the government shifts the labor supply curve to the right from S1 to S2, then the equilibrium quantity of labor hired will increase from L1 to L2, and the equilibrium wage will decrease from W1 to W2.

- g. If the government shifts the labor supply curve to the right from S1 to S2, then the equilibrium quantity of labor hired will increase from L1 to L2, and the equilibrium wage will decrease from W1 to W2.

- h. If the government shifts the labor supply curve to the right from S1 to S2, then the equilibrium quantity of labor hired will increase from L1 to L2, and the equilibrium wage will decrease from W1 to W2.

- i. If the government shifts the labor supply curve to the right from S1 to S2, then the equilibrium quantity of labor hired will increase from L1 to L2, and the equilibrium wage will decrease from W1 to W2.

Remember that the source of the shift in demand for labor matters.
