Scientific and Technical Aerospace Reports, 1975 Power-Aware Architecting Maarten Ditzel, R.H. Otten, Wouter A. Serdijn, 2007-10-11 The complexity of embedded systems on a chip is rapidly growing. Different experts are involved in the design process: application software designers, programmable core architects, on-chip communication engineers, analog and digital designers, deep submicron specialists, and process engineers. In order to arrive at an optimum implementation, compromises are needed across boundaries of the different domains of expertise. Therefore, the authors of this book take the point of view of the system architect who is a generalist rather than an expert. He is responsible for the definition of a high-level architecture which is globally optimal. Finding an optimum requires a proper balance between area performance and last but not least energy consumption. The challenge is not only the size of the design space but also the fact that the most important decisions are taken during the early design phases. The advantage of an early decision is that the impact on area performance and energy consumption is large. But the disadvantage is that the available information is often limited, incomplete, and inaccurate. The task of the system architect is to take the correct early decisions despite the uncertainties. PC Mag, 1994-12-06 PCMag.com is a leading authority on technology, delivering Labs-based independent reviews of the latest products and services. Proceedings, 1997 WHOI Acoustic Telemetry Project Interim Report 12/1/88 - 6/1/89 Josko A. Catipovic, Lee F. Freitag, 1989 This interim report covers the progress of the acoustic telemetry project during the period 12/1/88 to 5/15/89. In general, the work followed the format specified in WHOI proposal No. 5674.1. The major exception was the deletion of the transmitter array development task and a corresponding funding decrease from 242,242 to 170,000. In addition, the period for the funding was extended to June 30, partly due to a two-month delay in project startup. The telemetry project was centered around the construction, programming, and testing of a digital receiver prototype capable of supporting future signal processing algorithms in real time over ocean acoustic channels. The baseline receiver consists of a two-channel analog quadrature demodulator and interface to a multiprocessor receiver for digital signal processing. The software developed includes routines for command and control of the analog demodulator, data handling and formatting, and minimal software to digitally implement an incoherent MFSK demodulator, synchronizer, and data decoder. Data storage and display programs were also completed to facilitate the performance analysis of the unit during testing. The system was tested in Woods Hole harbor at data rates up to 4800 bits/sec. The acoustic channel was time-dispersive, Rayleigh fading, and performance close to theoretical expectations was achieved. We are confident that the system error behavior is arising from channel-caused effects and known deficiencies in system performance, such as excessive synchronizer steady-state jitter. Mechanical Engineering American Society of Mechanical Engineers, 1966-07 History of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers Preliminary report of the committee on Society history issued from time to time beginning with v. 30 Feb 1908.
