Captain Ravenshaw: The Maid of Cheapside. A Romance of Elizabethan London Robert Neilson Stephens, It was long past curfew yet Captain Ravenshaw still tarried in the front room of the Windmill tavern in the Old Jewry With him were some young gentlemen at whose cost he had been drinking throughout the afternoon For their bounty he had paid with the satirical conversation for which he was famed as well as with richly embellished anecdotes of his campaigns Late in the evening the company had been joined by a young gallant who had previously sent them from another chamber a quantity of Rhenish wine This newcomer now ordered supper for the party a proceeding at which the captain dissembled his long deferred pleasure for he had not eaten since the day before Moreover besides the prospect of supper there was this to hold him at the tavern he knew not where he should look for a bed or shelter upon leaving it The uncertainty was a grave consideration upon so black and windy a night Master Vallance the gentleman who had ordered supper had listened to the last of Ravenshaw s brag with a rather scornful silence But the other young men had been appreciative it was their pose or affectation to be as wicked as any man might hence they looked up to this celebrated bully as to a person from whom there was much to be learned and in whom there was much to be imitated The group had been sitting before the wide fireplace But as soon as the roast fowls were brought in there was a movement to the long table in the middle of the room The captain was gifted with active striding legs and long slashing arms So he was first to be seated and as he leaned forward upon his elbows he seemed to cover more than his share of the table He had a broad solid forehead an assertive nose a narrow but forward chin gray eyes accustomed to flash with a devil may care defiance a firm mouth inured to a curve of sardonic derision His rebellious hair down turning moustaches and pointed beard were of a dark brown hue He was a man of good height below the sword belt he was lank to the ground above he broadened out well for chest and shoulders His voice was quick vigorous and not unpleasantly metallic He was under thirty but rough experience had hardened his visage to an older look His jerkin shirt hose shoes and ruff also betokened much and severe usage
