Tom Jacibons

Overcoming Non Verbal Autism Thomas Eckert:

Overcoming Non-verbal Autism Thomas Eckert, 2015-11-29 Thomas shares how he uses technology and writing to communicate with others and overcome the barrier of not being able to speak Thomas is non verbal and communicates with others through writing and sign language Thomas shares how his therapist learned sign language to help teach him how to connect with others He loves to write and connect with people through reading and writing Thomas communicates with his friends through text message and on Facebook Technology has made it so Thomas does not have to be non verbal He is able to connect with other people in unique ways and this has allowed him to be able to express who he is to others Writing is an outlet for Thomas and this has allowed him to overcome a lot of barriers that he had from being non verbal Thomas did not communicate until he was 21 and this writing and sign language have been a huge step for him He now tells his mom and dad that he loves them He has overcome so much in the past few years and will share all of that with the reader in this one of a kind book How could someone non verbal have so much to share and say Read this book to learn more about Thomas and how he has overcome non verbal autism Here is an excerpt from the book I remember going on field trips in Elementary School when I was allowed to go with the class I was allowed to go with them but I had to ride on my own bus They called it the special needs bus and students from the special needs class were not allowed to ride on the regular bus that all of the other kids were riding on It made me mad that I could not ride with the other kids because there were girls on the other bus that I really liked but only dreamed of talking to Those girls would have been mean to me like they were at lunch if I was allowed to ride on their bus but I did not care because I just wanted to be like them and be included I wanted to be one of the kids no matter what and that day I set a goal to one day be like the other kids and communicate like they do It was a difficult process for me to try and get to where I am today but I am so proud of myself and my therapist for teaching me how to write Writing has been a remarkable outlet for me which has helped me meet many new people and it has helped me make a lot of new friends I feel so lucky to be able to sit here and write this book to share with all of you today because without my therapy team I would not be sitting here and typing this book I am a fast typist and that is because typing is something one of my therapist worked on with me a lot They knew that typing and writing might be one of my only ways to be able to communicate with other people so they went above and beyond to be able to ensure that I would be able to communicate with other adults

Curing Myself from Autism Tom Jacibons, 2015-09-06 Tom shares how he uses social skills coaching to learn social skills and learn about non verbal communication in this great read Tom does not medically cure himself from autism however as he explains in his book he learns skills and techniques that free him of his social challenges and cure his social skills problems This is a great read for teachers and parents wanting to learn how to help autistic children and teenagers learn social skills Tom describes how he studies social skills non verbal communication body language social thinking and social context in this book He also gives the reader tips for learning these skills through all of his experiences

Tom has worked closely with social skills coaching for five years now and he is happy with his accomplishments and will share that with the reader Here is an excerpt from the book More than ninety three percent of communication is non verbal I was missing nearly the entire conversation because I was only hearing the physical words of what a person was saying Now at least I am doing better at understanding some of those non verbal facial expressions and reading some body language when I engage in conversations with other people I have found that in learning how to communicate non verbally I am able to make more friends and because I am able to make more friends it is almost like autism is not even a bother to me right now Nothing has changed about me medically it is just that I was able to train my brain to do some of the things my brain did not naturally know how to do like neurotypical brains are already preprogrammed to do Tom hopes you enjoy reading his book

Non Verbal Autism Tom Smith,2015-09-03 Tom describes what living with non verbal autism is like He shares how it is a struggle to communicate with others He tries hard to make friends but feels no one really takes the time to get to know him He communicates with a communication device and he is a brilliant person Getting people to take extra time to communicate with him is challenging Tom shares the challenges and triumphs Tom wants to make friends He longs for friendships and relationships but because he does not know how to communicate he often is left to be lonely Tom talks about his depression and some of the things that he deals with in terms of anxiety Tom is an excellent writer He wants to teach his peers how to communicate with him the way he knows how Tom is non verbal He cannot get words to come from his brain to his mouth however he is great at getting words from his brain to paper Tom is brilliant and has a special place in the world somewhere He is just trying to find out where Will you read his book to get to know him
