The Great Depression was a severe economic downturn that began in 1929 and lasted until the mid-1930s. It was the longest and deepest economic recession in the history of the United States.

The Federal Reserve Board, which was created in 1914, was the first step in the government's response to the crisis. It was the first time that the government had taken direct action to control the money supply.

The Federal Reserve Board's actions were aimed at increasing the money supply and lowering interest rates. This was done by purchasing government bonds and increasing the discount rate.

The Federal Reserve Board's actions were successful in increasing the money supply and lowering interest rates. This helped to stimulate the economy and led to a gradual recovery.

The Federal Reserve Board's actions were also successful in reducing the unemployment rate. This was done by providing financial support to the unemployed and creating new jobs.

The Federal Reserve Board's actions were also successful in reducing the poverty rate. This was done by providing financial support to the poor and creating new jobs.
