Changing Paradigms and Approaches in Interpreter Training Pavol Šveda, 2021-05-26 This collection offers a unified treatment of the latest research on interpreter training in Central Europe with a special focus on community interpreting. The volume brings together perspectives from scholars working across different countries to map the current state of the art in interpreter training in the region. Across thirteen chapters, the book highlights the diverse range of innovative approaches interpreters and interpreter trainers are implementing in response to changing student populations and broader social changes around migration, bringing an increase in refugee communities in the region. Contributors analyze combined methodologies integrating new approaches to community interpreting with traditional conference interpreter training. Different chapters also look at novel perspectives on motivational aspects of interpreter training to examine the ways universities in the region are responding to a new generation of interpreter trainees. Offering an up-to-date synthesis of the latest approaches in interpreter training in Central Europe and takeaways for the discipline more broadly, this book will be of interest to students and scholars in interpreting studies as well as active interpreter trainers and program coordinators. Translating in Linguistically Diverse Societies Gabriel González Núñez, 2016-09-09 This work is the first book-length treatment on translation policy. Nearly everywhere in the world, populations are multilingual and mobile; consequently, language policies developed by the authorities must include choices about the use or non-use of translation. This book recognizes that these choices or the absence thereof become policies of their own in terms of translation. It builds upon the work of scholars in the fields of translation studies and language planning and policy in order to develop a new theoretical perspective on translation policy. In essence, the book proposes that translation policy can be understood as the management practice and beliefs surrounding the use of translation. The book deals with these issues under European and international law and then explores such management practice and beliefs in the UK as a case study. Ultimately, the reader can find a fuller appreciation of both the importance and complexity of translation policy.

Human Rights, the Rule of Law, and Development in Africa Paul Tiyambe Zeleza, Philip J. McConaughay, 2011-06-07 Changes in human rights environments in Africa over the past decade have been facilitated by astounding political transformations: the rise of mass movements and revolts driven by democratic and developmentalist ideals as well as mass murder and poverty perpetuated by desperate regimes and discredited global agencies. Human Rights, the Rule of Law, and Development in Africa seeks to make sense of human rights in Africa through the lens of its triumphs and tragedies, its uneven developments and complex demands. The volume makes a significant contribution to the debate about the connections between the protection of human rights and the pursuit of economic development by interrogating the paradigms, politics, and practices of human rights in Africa. Throughout the essays, emphasize that democratic and human rights regimes are products of concrete social struggles, not simply textual or legal.

discourses Including some of Africa s leading scholars jurists and human rights activists contributors to the volume diverge from Western theories of African democratization by rejecting the continental view of an Africa blighted by failure disease and economic malaise It argues instead that Africa has strengthened and shaped international law such as the right to self determination inspired by the process of decolonization and the definition of the refugee Insisting on the holistic view that human rights are as much about economic and social rights as they are about civil and political rights the contributors offer novel analyses of African conceptions experiences and aspirations of human rights which manifest themselves in complex global regional and local idioms Further they explore the varied constructions of human rights in African and Western discourses and the roles played by states and NGOs in promoting or subverting human rights Combining academic analysis with social concern intellectual discourse with civic engagement and scholarly research with institution building this is a compelling and original approach to the question whether externally inspired solutions to African human rights issues have validity in a postcolonial world
