New Research On Postpartum Depression:

New Research on Postpartum Depression Adrian I. Rosenfield, 2007 Postpartum depression affects 10-15 percent of women any time from a month to a year after childbirth. Women with postpartum depression may feel restless, anxious, sad or depressed. They may have feelings of guilt, decreased energy and motivation and a sense of worthlessness. They may also have sleep difficulties and undergo unexplained weight loss or gain. Some mothers may worry about hurting themselves or their baby. In extremely rare cases, less than 1 percent of new mothers, women may develop something called postpartum psychosis. It usually occurs within the first few weeks after delivery. Symptoms may include refusing to eat, frantic energy, sleep disturbance, paranoia and irrational thoughts. Women with postpartum psychosis usually need to be hospitalised.

Postpartum Depression Michael W. O'Hara, 2013-11-21 What is the prevalence of mood disorders during pregnancy and the postpartum period? Does the prevalence vary compared to nonchildbearing women? What are the psychosocial and neurobiologic factors that predict risk for postpartum mood disorders? Postpartum Depression: Causes and Consequences by Michael W. O'Hara synthesizes a series of efforts to address these and other difficult questions. It is a clear, cohesive and carefully prepared work which serves not only as a review of more than a decade of research but also as a charge for future investigation regarding unanswered questions about postpartum mood disturbance. Depression after childbirth is one of the most prevalent complications in modern obstetrics. Nonetheless, the subject of postpartum mood disorders remains understudied. Some investigators pursue nosologic debates regarding the extent to which postpartum depression should be considered a discreet diagnostic entity. Others have tried to identify biologic or psychosocial factors that are uniquely associated with puerperal illness. More recent efforts have begun to focus on the need to identify predictors of risk for developing depression during pregnancy and the postpartum period. Identification of women at risk can lead to prophylactic treatment strategies that attenuate such risk, thereby limiting morbidity associated with untreated depression and the impact of maternal psychiatric disorder on child development.

Motherhood and Postnatal Depression Carolyn Westall, Pranee Liamputtong, 2011-07-21 Globally postnatal depression PND is a growing public health problem PND affects 10 to 15% of women in Western society It caused by a combination of biological psychological and social factors Two models have attempted to define and explain PND the biomedical and the sociological models The traditional biomedical model views PND as a medical condition which implies there is individual pathology and abnormality Whilst the biomedical model has been the dominant model in treating PND it has been criticized by feminist sociologists and psychologists for its rigidity in defining and explaining PND In contrast the psychosocial model of health acknowledges the biological factors that impact on emotional well being but places more emphasis on the personal and social factors that impact on emotional well being but places more emphasis on the personal and social factors that contribute to depressive symptoms such as gender poverty social disadvantage and social class The central argument throughout this book is the importance of support before and after the birth for women s emotional well being This book will also include women s journeys through pregnancy childbirth motherhood postnatal depression and resolution To date literature has focused on women s lived experiences of PND rather than their personal journeys through pregnancy childbirth and early motherhood Additionally the adjustment to fatherhood has received less attention For example little is known about the impact of postnatal depression on the partner what support partners offer when women with the intention to fill the gap in knowledge of cultural and social issues relating to pregnancy childbirth and motherhood for woman who were diagnosed with and had resolved PND
