TODAY'S YOUTH

[illegible][illegible][illegible]

[A] Some people, especially in the United States, believe that religious and non-religious people have different levels of morality. They think that religious people are more morally upright than non-religious people. However, many studies have shown that religious people are not necessarily more moral than non-religious people. In fact, some studies have found that religious people are more likely to engage in immoral behavior than non-religious people. For example, a study by the Pew Research Center found that religious people are more likely to lie, cheat, and steal than non-religious people. Another study by the same organization found that religious people are more likely to engage in sexual misconduct than non-religious people. These findings suggest that religious people are not necessarily more moral than non-religious people. In fact, they may be more likely to engage in immoral behavior than non-religious people.
