What Mothers Say about Special Education J. Valle,2009-03-16 This book is an alternative account of special education from the cross generational perspective of 15 mothers whose children labelled learning dis abled LD attended public schools during the last four decades Mothering Special Needs Anna Karin Kingston,2004 This thesis discusses findings from a qualitative study exploring the lived experiences of 18 Irish mothers of children with Autistic Spectrum Disorder ASD Down syndrome and or Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder ADHD Their narratives are analysed and discussed using a theoretical framework based on feminist writings on motherhood as well as literature on childhood disabilities These mothers' voices are represented in a historical and cultural context of legislation and social policies on learning disabilities Furthermore the experience of mothering a child with special needs in Ireland is analysed in an international context in particular in relation to the Swedish situation The chosen methodology a feminist ethnography facilitated a positive research partnership with the participants The study emphasising empowerment and reflexivity involved initial in depth interviews followed up with meetings a year later Several themes were explored during the course of the research such as maternal coping maternal work and employment as well as mothers' relationships with fathers families and networks in society The findings suggest that Irish mothers of children with special needs are isolated and marginalised and many times suffer high levels of stress and depression similar to their peers in other countries Lack of services and resources as well as a persistent top down relationship with professionals contribute to inflict hardship on the lives of these women Despite these oppressive circumstances these mothers become resilient agents embarking on a struggle on behalf of their children This has resulted in increased pressure on the State and service providers to involve mothers as genuine partners in planning policies and services affecting their children A persistent gender divide however limits these women's choices to fully participate in society The social construction of motherhood contributes to a self enforced silence concerning the mothers' own personal aspirations and prevents these mothers from expressing agency on their own behalf Thus this study emphasises the importance of challenging the existing patriarchal institution of motherhood as part of a strategy to improve circumstances for this group of women in society More Different Than Others? Susan McGee Bailey,1987

Parenting and Inclusive Education Chrissie Rogers,2007-07-03 This tells of twenty four couples negotiating the emotional and practical journey of parenting their learning disabled child The author a researcher sociologist and mother of a learning disabled daughter questions the weak inclusive education discourse and unpacks parents' narratives in relation to denial disappointment and social exclusion Mothers Talk about Learning Disabilities Elizabeth Weiss,1989 Other books on
