Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 12 sedentary women, 30 to 45 years of age, who were randomly selected from a telephone directory. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The control group consisted of six women who did not exercise, and the exercise group consisted of six women who exercised for 12 weeks. The exercise program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The sessions were performed on a stationary bike at a heart rate of 150 beats per minute. The control group was instructed to maintain their current level of activity. The subjects were monitored for HR and EE at baseline and at the end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant increase in HR and EE compared to the control group. The HR of the exercise group increased from 140 to 150 beats per minute, and the EE increased from 1,800 to 2,200 kcal per day. The control group showed no significant change in HR or EE. These results suggest that a 12-week exercise program can improve the cardiovascular fitness and energy expenditure of sedentary, middle-aged women.

QUESTION Which of the following is not a function of the endoplasmic reticulum?

ANSWER C. Synthesis of nucleic acids

EXPLANATION The endoplasmic reticulum is a complex network of membranes that is involved in a variety of cellular processes, including the synthesis and transport of proteins and lipids. It is also involved in the storage and release of calcium ions. However, the synthesis of nucleic acids is not a function of the endoplasmic reticulum. Nucleic acids are synthesized in the nucleus of the cell.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10 sedentary, middle-aged men. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 min. The sessions included aerobic and resistance training. The results showed that the subjects' heart rate, blood pressure, and body weight decreased significantly after the program. The subjects' maximum oxygen consumption and maximum heart rate also increased significantly. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged men.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological characteristics of young women. The subjects were 15 young women (mean age 20.5 years) who were divided into two groups: a control group (CG) and an experimental group (EG). The EG performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The training program included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The CG performed no training. The physical characteristics measured were body mass index (BMI), body fat percentage (BF%), and maximal oxygen consumption (VO<sub>2</sub>max). The psychological characteristics measured were anxiety, depression, and self-esteem. The results showed that the EG had significantly lower BMI, BF%, and VO<sub>2</sub>max than the CG at the end of the 12-week program. The EG also had significantly lower anxiety, depression, and self-esteem than the CG at the end of the 12-week program. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical and psychological characteristics of young women.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the women was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the women. The walking program significantly improved the women's cardiovascular fitness, as measured by the 6-minute walk test. The walking program also significantly improved the women's psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program had no significant effect on the women's weight or body mass index. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
