Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the subjects was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' psychological health, as measured by self-reported stress and mood. The results of this study suggest that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract

The following table shows the results of the regression analysis for the dependent variable "Number of children in the household" (N = 1,000). The independent variables are "Age of the head of household" and "Gender of the head of household". The table includes the coefficient estimates, standard errors, and t-statistics for each variable.

Variable	Coefficient	Standard Error	t-statistic
Age of the head of household	0.001	0.000	1.2
Gender of the head of household	-0.050	0.020	-2.5
Constant	1.500	0.100	15.0

The results indicate that the age of the head of household has a positive but statistically insignificant effect on the number of children in the household. The gender of the head of household has a negative and statistically significant effect, suggesting that households headed by women tend to have fewer children than those headed by men.
