

3 Basic Motorcycle Maintenance

Motorcycles, being mechanical, need lots of loving care. Otherwise they begin acting up and lose their charm. Many owners are inveterate tinkerers who spend all their time out in the garage making various adjustments, including watering engine parts over the floor. These various "adjustments" unfortunately are usually carried out with varying degrees of skill. And sometimes an owner takes such liberties with his new motorcycle that he voids its warranty. Other owners, who aren't tinkers at all, shamefully neglect their motorcycles. They assume that the factory warranty will protect them in case something goes haywire, forgetting that unless they perform routine maintenance themselves and take the motorcycle to a franchised dealer for regular service, their warranties will be voided too.

A good rule is: Take your motorcycle to a franchised dealer for major repairs, but do the routine maintenance yourself.

This is a simple-sounding job, but if done incorrectly serious problems can result. The water should be sprayed on cold with a garden hose adjusted so as to provide very low pressure. Too much pressure will force water inside the paper air filter elements, the carburetors, the ignition components, the brakes, and the oil-seal boots.

The best way to stop water from dripping into the air filter elements and inside the carburetors is to cover these components with cellophane before washing. All other parts can be sprayed with water—providing they are dried immediately afterward with either compressed air or a sponge.

After drying, the carburetor float bowls must be drained. If the bowls are fitted with a drain plug, the trapped water can be removed easily. If not, the bowls must be taken off.

When left in the carburetor bowls, water causes corrosion. Also it can restrict the flow of gasoline to the engine, causing a "lean" mixture. A lean mixture in turn can trigger high temperatures in the combustion chamber, resulting in possible piston failure.

After the carburetors are washed and dried, the engine should be started and the motorcycle ridden for approximately 15 minutes. This will evaporate any leftover water from inaccessible areas. (Remember, wet brakes are not as effective as dry ones, and it takes time for them to dry out.)

After a wash job the motorcycle has any water that
