The language is a direct, pragmatic form of communication characterized by the high frequency of direct address, as in the words, "I say to you" (John 1:12), "I say to you" (John 1:13), and "I say to you" (John 1:14). The language is also characterized by the use of the first person singular, as in the words, "I say to you" (John 1:12), "I say to you" (John 1:13), and "I say to you" (John 1:14).

The history of the language itself has been, though that may often remain unacknowledged by its speakers, a history of evolution through centuries after the writing of the original texts. Indeed, it is often suggested that the text itself has been constructed through generations of editors on the basis of their own linguistic and literary skills. Indeed, many have believed that the gospel was in reality a mosaic of texts in its final published form, a view that has been widely rejected by scholars.

Text Complexity and Reading

Comprehension Tests Erik Castello, 2008 Based on the analysis of a specially compiled corpus of internationally recognized English as a foreign language EFL reading tests at different levels of proficiency this volume explores the relation between the complexity of written texts and the difficulty of reading comprehension tests It brings together linguistic investigations into the text inherent complexity of the tests and a study of the data derived from their administration to groups of Italian university students The study of text complexity draws on corpus linguistics text linguistics and systemic functional linguistics Both quantitative and qualitative analyses are carried out on the language used in the reading texts and in the related tasks that make up the corpus of tests The assessment of test difficulty on the other hand is informed by research on language testing and in particular by findings and methodologies of Classical Test Theory and Item Response Theory Relevant aspects of these theories are used to analyze and interpret both the data obtained from the administration of the tests and the data collected by means of feedback questionnaires completed by test takers The application of such diverse methodologies and the subsequent comparison of the results of the analyses has brought out interesting correlations between text inherent complexity perceived test difficulty and actual test difficulty
