Gun Camera

A gun camera is mounted in the leading edge of the left wing, and is accessible for loading and adjustment from the left wheel well. A small door covers the camera aperture in the wing; this door remains open during flight, but is closed by a mechanical linkage when the landing gear is retracted, thus protecting the lens from blows and or debris when the airplane is on the ground.

Guns and camera are controlled by a camera-control switch on the front switch panel; this same switch also turns on the lamp in the optical sight. With the switch flicked up to CAMERA, CAMERA & ROCKET, the guns fire and the camera operates when you press the trigger on the stick. When the stick is down to CAMERA & ROCKET you'll take pictures by pressing the trigger, but the guns will not fire. Middle position of the switch is OFF; be sure to keep it there during takeoffs, landings and all ground operations.

The guns and camera are tested electrically so that their operation is not affected by the camera and gunmaster at high altitude. Gun master are controlled by a switch on the right switch panel. The camera master is built into the camera, and works automatically whenever the camera switch is turned on.
