

Increase ventilation when larger numbers of people are in the vehicle.

NOTE: Even when it is raining or snowing, ventilation air from outside will be far drier than interior air and will effectively reduce condensation.

2. Install storm windows.
Install tight-fitting storm windows to reduce or eliminate condensation on window glass. The interior surface of the window will be at least 20 degrees warmer, greatly reducing moisture condensation.
3. Reduce moisture released inside the vehicle.
Run the range vent fan when cooking and the bath vent fan (or open the bath vent) when bathing to carry water vapor out of the vehicle. Avoid making steam from excessive boiling or use of hot water. Remove water or snow from shoes before entering to avoid soaking the carpet. Avoid drying wet overcoats or other clothes inside the vehicle.
Do not heat the vehicle interior with the range or oven. In addition to the hazards of toxic fumes and oxygen depletion which make heating by the range or oven very dangerous, open flames add moisture to the interior air, increasing condensation.
4. Ventilate closets and cabinets.
During prolonged use in very cold weather, leave cabinet and closet doors partially open to warm and ventilate the interiors of storage compartments built against exterior walls. The air flow will warm the exterior wall surface, reducing or eliminating condensation and preventing possible ice formation.
5. Install a dehumidifier appliance.
During prolonged, continuous use, a dehumidifying appliance may be more comfortable and effective in removing excess moisture from the interior air. While use of a dehumidifier is not a "cure-all", and ventilation, storm windows, and moisture reduction continue to be important, operation of the dehumidifier will reduce the amount of outside air needed for ventilation. Heating load on the furnace will be reduced, and the interior will be less drafty.
