Turnaround Edward A. Myers, 2004 Ed Myers 1917-2002 was a remarkable man who focused his capacious mind and learning on the issue of the earth's future A realist with an engaging sense of humor he wrote dozens of articles letters sermons and diatribes on topics ranging from global climate change to the benefits of not smoking Running throughout all his writings was his belief that the earth's long term health could only be assured if we its inhabitants changed our behavior And he firmly believed we had the means and the will to do so Ed Myers saw the humor in almost everything that happened but he was deadly serious about saving the planet and turning it over to successive generations in better shape than he found it Nobody forgot Ed Myers or his message So we are presently engaged in a gigantic planetary chemical experiment to see how much CO₂ and its global effects we can stand When the experiment is complete there won't be anybody around to report on it The Creation in writer Annie Dillard's phrase will be playing to an empty house This dreary prospect does not have to happen At the end of the nineteenth century we made a choice or rather had it made for us We would run the world on fossil fuels It proved to be a very successful choice for a runaway industrial society and worked well in its own way for about a century But for the long term the choice was in a word lousy Now we have a chance to turn it around Our only chance Additional commentary and updates are provided by Peter Shelley Conservation Law Foundation Don Hudson Chewonki Foundation Tom Chappell Tom's of Maine Robin Alden and Melissa Waterman EM, 2000 Proceedings of the Institution of Civil Engineers, 2001
